Support education workers at York

CUPE 3903 is on strike for fair wages, protection against high tuition fees and job security for contract faculty. Students, faculty and campus workers all gain from a victory by CUPE 3903. The employer – the York University administration – has been unwilling to meet wage demands and has ignored the other issues that will improve the working conditions for CUPE 3903 members. At the same time, the administration is increasing tuition fees. Students and workers have to stand together to fight concessions and rising tuition fees because both stem from the systematic underfunding of post-secondary education.

Learning conditions and working conditions are inseparable. If CUPE 3903 can win this strike, it will strengthen the struggle for lower tuition and better working conditions in every university and college in Ontario.
